

Thermal Analysis Crucible

Thermal Analysis Crucible

Crucibles serve as containers for samples during thermoanalytical measurements. They guarantee that the sensor is not contaminated by the measurement. The type of crucible used for a measurement can have a large effect on the quality of the results obtained, and in addition, also influences important characteristics of the DSC measuring cell. Considering the relevant factors before the measurement can often help to save time later on when interpreting the curve.

Features and benefits:

Large volume – increases the sensitivity

Low mass – pushes the resolution to the limit

Purity – no interaction of the sample with the crucible

Material – guarantees high thermal conductivity and form stability

Flatness – ensures perfect thermal contact and no artifacts

Material	Max Use Temperature (°C)	Note
Stainless steel crucible	350
Aluminum crucible	600
Zirconia crucible	1050
Platinum crucible	1200
Alumina(95%) crucible	1500
Alumina(99%) crucible	1800
Graphite crucible	2000	If it's used in oxygen atmosphere, it will start to be oxygenized when the temperature is higher than 700-800°C. If it's used in the protective atmosphere, it can stand more than 2000°C.

Crucible Sealing Press

used for Aluminum crucible

The press allows the pan to be sealed very easily. Under the pressure of the plunger the pan is cold welded hermetically with the lid. After changing plunger and die you can use the press for other crucibles.
